

A CAREER PRACTITIONER IN EVERY SCHOOL

Canadian
Career Development
Foundation

The International Career Development Peak Body Network (ICDPBN) comprises career development professional bodies from Australia, Canada, United Kingdom, New Zealand and South Africa. The purpose of the ICDPBN is bring the profession closer together from an international perspective, to share best practices and mobility.

The Career Industry Council of Australia supports the business council's call for a career practitioner in every secondary school. "Every student should have access to a career practitioner. Modern and accessible career information and guidance is crucial for helping students identify future job opportunities and equipping them with the knowledge and skills necessary for success,"

"A career practitioner in every school would ensure career development is woven into the education system rather than left to chance,"

Ensuring students receive guidance from professionally trained practitioners who meet national competency standards will guarantee consistent, evidence-based, and ethical career development services, supporting students' long-term success. As the demand for skilled professionals increases, access to quality, structured, and scalable career development services, led by professionally qualified practitioners will be essential in building a resilient and adaptable workforce.
